Labor of Love: The Birth of San Francisco Pride, 1970–1980

Wednesday, April 15

7:00-9:00 p.m.

4127 18th St., San Francisco Admission: $5; free for members

A new exhibition at the GLBT Historical Society Museum showcases how San Francisco forged the internationally renowned annual celebration that would come to be known as Pride. The exhibition begins in 1970, when a handful of queens and hippies marched down Polk Street, and culminates with the 1980 Gay Freedom Day Parade, which gathered nearly a quarter-million participants. Featuring historic photographs, ephemera, artifacts, and film and sound recordings from the archives of the GLBT Historical Society, the exhibition explores the goals, the controversies, the hard work, the desires, and the sometimes competing spirits of struggle and celebration that laid the foundations for one of the city's best-known public festivals. Light refreshments will be served, and the curators will give brief remarks. Tickets are available online at https://bit.ly/2w6OVXx.
